The criteria for traffic control devices, including TODS, is defined in the Federal Highway Administration’s Manual on Uniform Traffic Control Devices, in Chapter 2G. The statewide policy is available in the Florida Administrative Code 14-51, Part VI, under Tourist Oriented Directional Signs.

The proposed design, location, materials, and support structure must fully comply with the FDOT’s current Design Standards Indices and in Retroreflective and Nonreflective Sign Sheeting Sections 700 and 994, from the current edition of the Standard Specifications for Road and Bridge Construction.

TODS is administered by qualified rural counties and municipalities.

While rural counties and municipalities will enjoy the flexibility that comes with the administration of the TODS Program, the sign and structure to be permitted on the state highway system must meet FDOT standards. To assist local governments, FDOT has developed a one-size-fits-all standard index for design, fabrication, and installation of TODS assemblies. Any changes to this index, such as custom sign supports, must be approved by a licensed professional engineer. For TODS assemblies on local roads, local construction standards apply.

TODS are standard-design white on blue service guide signs for use on rural roads only. These sign assemblies have one or more panels that identify the business and provide directional information.

With the implementation of TODS, rural governments are encouraged to define the eligibility criteria for family-oriented businesses which receive a major portion of income and visitors from people who do not live in the immediate area, including:

- Recreational activities
- Agricultural production
- Eateries offering local cuisine
- Retail markets
- Galleries

TODS can include local treasures, or can be expanded to include convenience stores and national franchise food operations based on community choice.
