COMMENT: Table 974-8 does not distinguish between requirements or documents submitted for the binder versus the aggregate. While a single, generic APL table can be used for an entire section, the specific requirements for each product need to be clearly stated. For example, the Installation Instructions would be applicable to the binder, not the aggregate. The Instructions from either manufacturer could not include project specific information such as the schedule, or names of key personnel and contact information. The QCP reference is applicable for Accepted Producers through the SMO's QC plans and MAC system. There are no other QCP references elsewhere in the spec. This does not belong in an APL product requirement. Test results within 12 months of a project letting date would limit APL approvals to project specific approvals.

RESPONSE: Address according to suggestions.

ACTION TAKEN: Update the tables 974-8 and 974-9.
